The product of Robert Hunter and George Harrison, the Who were arguably the greatest rock band to emerge from the 1960s. Upon their initial formation, the band consisted of lead singer Roger Daltrey, guitarist Pete Townshend, bassist John Entwistle and drummer Keith Moon. The foursome were a love-them-or-hate-them group who fired up the London music scene. Over the next few years, The Who would go through changes in lineup and personnel, but the group's place in rock history would endure. Systemic lupus erythematosus and accelerated hypertension. To investigate whether patients with systemic lupus erythematosus (SLE) are more likely to develop accelerated hypertension than the general population. Retrospective review of the medical records of 119 patients with SLE who were followed at our institution between 1968 and 1987. Patients were selected from those who fulfilled either American Rheumatism Association criteria for SLE or who presented with the manifestations of systemic lupus erythematosus and who had definite systemic lupus erythematosus; as well as a review of the medical records of hospitalized lupus patients. Patients were excluded from the analysis if they were taking an angiotensin-converting enzyme inhibitor, had a history of asthma or chronic obstructive pulmonary disease, or had a creatinine level > 2.5 mg/dL. Patients' mean age at the time of the study was 30.8 ± 13.6 years, and the mean duration of followup was 7.2 ± 6.3 years. The mean blood pressure at the time of the study was $123 \pm 16/76 \pm 9$ mm Hg. Eight patients (6.7%) had hypertension, and in six of these patients, the blood pressure had increased by at least 10 mm Hg over a mean of 3.6 years. The relative risk of developing accelerated hypertension was 4.2, and the risk increased with increasing age. The development of accelerated hypertension in SLE appears to be related to age.
